Tele-Law: Reaching the Unreached

Tele-Law lets anyone talk to a panel lawyer by video call or phone through a Common Service Centre and get free legal advice.

What you may get

Free legal advice from a panel lawyer through video conferencing or telephone at the Common Service Centre in your gram panchayat, or through the Tele-Law citizens' mobile app. The service is free of cost for all citizens.

Who it is for

Any citizen who needs legal advice, especially people in rural and remote areas, women and disadvantaged groups.

Main conditions

- Legal advice is open to everyone and costs nothing.
- Advice can be taken on matters such as dowry, family disputes, divorce, domestic violence, maintenance, property and land rights, equal wages, maternity benefits, child marriage and FIR registration.
- A person who comes under Section 12 of the Legal Services Authorities Act, 1987 needs to show proof of that category.

Documents

- Personal information and any relevant document, where applicable
- Proof of category if you come under Section 12 of the Legal Services Authorities Act, 1987

How to apply

1. Go to the Common Service Centre in your gram panchayat and meet the Village Level Entrepreneur or the Para Legal Volunteer.
2. They register you on the Tele-Law portal and book an appointment with a panel lawyer.
3. Take the advice by video call or telephone at the appointed time; you can also register through the Tele-Law citizens' mobile app.
